This lavishly produced celebration of the worlds of fantasy, science fiction, horror and the surreal is the annual yearbook for aficionados of imaginative art. Spectrum 7 is an eye-opening chronicle of vision, a trip through the Outer Limits of creativity.

Selected by a renowned jury of artists and art directors, the seventh volume of Spectrum expands upon the groundwork laid by its award-winning previous editions by showcasing an arresting selection of wondrous work by craftspeople from around the globe.

Featuring nearly 350 glorious drawings, paintings, and sculptures by over 200 of today's finest artists, Spectrum has become one of the most anticipated books of the year for both casual fans and members of the creative community alike. If you want to find out what your favorites have been up to, discover what trends are emerging in the marketplace, or meet fresh, new talent this is your one-stop resource. Readers will also find an insightful, illustrated "Year In Review" along with Spectrum's recognition of its sixth Grand Master Award recipient, Alan Lee.

This is a book that beautifully challenges our perceptions of reality; settle back and get ready to visit other worlds.

TIM UNDERWOOD

We had kicked around the idea of Spectrum for ten years before Tim, alone among all the other publishers we had approached, stepped up to the plate and said, "I'll do it."

His vision, and friendship, is the reason you've all been able to enjoy seven volumes in this series.

Thanks, Tim.

This seventh addition to the Spectrum series wasn't intended to be the largest volume yet. At 200 pages and more than 200 artists it's a weighty tome. Our publisher, Tim Underwood, did the math, showed us the projected increase in production expenses, calculated the costs of shipping, figured all the variables. What could we do?

Blame the artists. It's all their fault for creating remarkable work throughout last year.

Spectrum is the result of an annual Call For Entries: each Fall we mail out posters to artists around the world inviting them to take part in the competition. Participation is open to everyone and is strictly voluntary. Structured similarly to other general art competitions and annuals (like those sponsored by the Society of Illustrators and Communication Arts), Spectrum is unique in its focus on works which embrace the themes of science fiction, fantasy, horror, the surreal, and the uncategorizable. The best in fantastic art. Though some in the fine arts community have questioned our use of the term "fantastic art" (they prefer it be applied to Magritte-inspired symbolists), we believe the subtitle applies. There is a world full of interpretations and sensibilities out there and Spectrum embraces them all.

The Spectrum 7 jury convened in Kansas City in February, 2000 to make selections for this book from just under 3000 entries. Rough weather and flight delays created havoc with the travel of virtually every out-of-town judge; the difficulties may well have contributed to a bonding among the jury that resulted in an enjoyable, if frenzied, weekend for all involved. They laughed, they bumped heads, they argued and joked: an unwitting symbol of the creative community that annually puts aside its differences and pulls together to make this book possible. One variation this year from past judging events was the selection of award-winners in each category: instead of a straight vote, majority wins, we allowed the jury to debate the merits of each work under consideration. Judges were excluded from any discussions revolving around the consideration of their own works.

The final results you'll find in the pages ahead.

Our thanks to the jurors, the artistic community, and the readers for once again making Spectrum possible.

Alan LEE

G R A N D M A S T E R A W A R D

"The first books I remember reading were fairy stories," Alan Lee reveals, "and visits to the local library soon became focused on the myths and legends section—but my fate was really sealed when I was allowed to stay up late one night to watch Alexander Korda's wonderful fantasy film, The Thief of Baghdad. As a child I built castles from earth, stone, or cardboard, creating stories with plastic knights and imaginary monsters. However, I soon discovered that it was just as satisfying to play out these dramas and romances with pencil and paper and when I found that one piece of paper was not enough for all the convolutions of a story, my drawings started to take the form of comic strips."

Born in Harrow, Middlesex, Alan Lee cultivated an interest in Celtic and Norse mythology throughout his childhood. From 1966 to 1969 he studied at the Ealing School of Art in London, where he filled several portfolios which reflected his passion and ultimately the direction his career would take. David Larkin of Panther Books gave him his first professional assignments—covers for a series of comic novels by Colin Spencer—and Lee was quickly enmeshed in the hectic world of commercial art.

In 1975 he moved to Devon and began sharing studio space with Brian Froud. "I spent a year or so producing 125 color illustrations for a poorly paid book on 'the mysterious', which mysteriously disappeared, but then had the great good fortune to meet Ian and Betty Ballantine," Lee remembers. "I did some work for them on a book called Once Upon a Time, which was edited and designed by David Larkin, and shortly afterward they invited Brian and myself to collaborate on a book about fairies to follow their successful publication of Gnomes by Rien Poortliet."

Still in print nearly 25 years later, Faeries introduced Lee and Froud to an international audience and the royalties afforded Alan the time to illustrate The Mabinogion, the collection of Welsh legends for Dragon's Dream. Working on the book was a life-long ambition and Lee's meticulous art exhibit his love for his subject matter. From there he proceeded to provide the art for a wide variety books (including exceptional work for Rosemary Sutcliffe's retelling of The Iliad and The Odyssey: Black Ships Before Troy and The Wanderings of Odysseus) and contributed to the design of such films as Legend, Eric the Viking, and the TV movie Merlin.

Since the success of Faeries, however, Alan Lee has become best known in recent years for his watercolor illustrations for The Hobbit and The Lord of the Rings. Though many artists have produced memorable interpretations of the denizens of Middle Earth, Lee's name has arguably become synonymous with Tolkien's: his almost monochromatic panels capture a dignity and, at the same time, a sense of melancholy that sets him apart from other Rings painters. His definitive interpretations were also recognized by the director of the forthcoming film adaptations, Peter Jackson: he flew Alan to New Zealand for the better part of a year to help design the movie. "I read The Lord of the Rings as a teenager and felt that Tolkien had taken every element of all the myths and legends I'd read to that date and woven them into a seamless narrative," Lee says. "More importantly, he had created a vast, beautiful landscape that dwarfed its inhabitants and would endure long after they had departed."

In the commercial art world everything is a compromise, everything is due yesterday, everything is reliant on the whims of the client: that Alan Lee has been able pursue his passions without deviating from his course and with a clarity of vision is a tribute to his talent, patience, and perseverance. That his reputation among artists and readers continues to grow with each new work proves that his choices were and are correct.

As the creator of a body of work which challenges our perceptions, which delights our imaginations and which reawakens our sense of wonder, Alan Lee is an artist who will, like Tolkien's landscapes, endure in our memories.

T h e Y e a r I n Review

When people look back on 1999, in all likelihood it will be considered the year of frenzied hype and promotion; twelve months in which form was often more important than substance, when glitz and surface gloss were the substance. Regis kept asking, "Who wants to be a millionaire?" and as a nation we raised our hands and shouted in unison, "Mel!" in the vain hope of being rewarded for remembering the answers to Trivial Pursuit® questions. Bigger, bolder, wilder, newer: the close of the century seemed to be an adjective waiting to happen. In the film adaptation of Inherit the Wind Spencer Tracy relates to Frederic March the story of a rocking horse named Golden Dancer on display in a store window which he coveted as a boy. On Christmas morning he finds Golden Dancer under the tree, thanks to the sacrifices of his parents; Tracy tells how he joyfully hopped on the horse...and it instantly broke into pieces. It was made of rotten wood and sawdust, all held together with a veneer of spit and varnish.

1999 witnessed a lot of bucksters hawking glittering wares or spouting lofty ideals just as an equal number of spin doctors worked overtime at damage control as their own "Golden Dancers" collapsed under the weight of their own breathless promotions or pretentious pronouncements. Star Wars: The Phantom Menace employed a healthy number of talented artists and, despite the shadow of hyped-expectations, was able to satisfy fans of the franchise. On the other hand, Warners' superb The Iron Giant undeservedly played to empty houses and was quickly relegated to the video rental shelves. Pokémon pandemonium grew to such proportions that it was parodied on the irreverent South Park while the low-budget, documentary-style conceit of The Blair Witch Project, combined with savvy web promotion, overwhelmed the outsider-cynicism of the GenX target audience. Geof Darrow's designs for The Matrix created the look and uniform of choice for cyberpunk wannabes everywhere almost at the same time that his and Frank Miller's Big Guy & Rusty the Boy Robot animated series (based on their Dark Horse comic) for Fox Kids TV crashed and burned. The wonderful and unique Words and Pictures Museum in Northampton, Massachusetts closed its doors for the last time, selling some of its collection through Sotheby's—and was promptly resurrected as a virtual museum on the web. (Unfortunately, it's sort of like "new" Coke™; it's just not the same.) We were swamped with e-commerce technobabble as Internet stock prices soared almost as high as Internet business debt. We watched multinational, multimedia companies merge, morph, and roll over the competition while the independent mom&pop entrepreneur helplessly cried foul (then ran around the corner and eroded the corporations' profitability by offering similar goods and services faster, better, and cheaper). We became furious as the number of copyright infringements by cretinous thieves on the Internet increased almost unabated, were reservedly optimistic as the Graphic Artists Guild joined the UAW/AFL/CIO union, chortled as NY's Mayor Giuliani became apoplectic over the "Sensations" art exhibition, and shook our heads as parent groups attacked the Harry Potter books for their "promotion" of witchcraft. Everything out of Hollywood was a "blockbuster," everything out of New York was a "break-out bestseller," and everything offered on eBay, the online auction site, was "rare" or "sexy" or both. We shuddered at the ceaseless apocalyptic predictions of a global computer meltdown and the repercussions of same come the mythic Y2K—and observed the calendar rollover without much of a hitch at midnight on New Year's Eve.

Certainly, every year has its share of people and products and events that are repeatedly pushed and promoted to the point of over-saturation and burn-out. But throughout 1999 it seemed that the hype machine was jammed in overdrive as everyone tried to stretch Andy Warhol's proverbial fifteen minutes of fame (and ostensibly a shot at your wallet) to the bursting point. Equally certain, however, was that quality ultimately wins out, that the work of creators with skill and originality will remain fresh in our minds for years to come just as the allegorical "Golden Dancers" are discarded and quickly forgotten.

That's the theory, anyway.

In the "good old days" of Madison Avenue, if a client wanted an unlikely and complicated situation for their product the ad agency would turn to an illustrator to make the idea "real." Dancing animals, Martian consumers, even the idealized American family, all were brought to life by a talented artist with a pencil and a paintbrush. Subsequently advertising accounts were the most lucrative for illustrators.

Now days, with the widespread use of the computer and CGI, with the ability to make the illusion indistinguishable from reality, designers and photographers rule the ad biz. Illustrators count themselves fortunate when they're called in for work on retro-chic or cartoon-flavor campaigns.

Oh for the days of yore.

The nature of the advertising business make crediting notable efforts extremely difficult, if not impossible. Spotted were Joe Sorren's ad for Morrow Snowboards and Jody Hewgill's poster for the Arena Stage production of "How I learned to Drive"; I recognized some admirable work by Mark Summers, Bill Mayer, Brad Holland, and Rafal Olbinski, but only because their styles are readily identifiable.

B O O K S

Okay, when it comes to e-books I'm a Luddite. Old fashioned. Crusty. A poop.

Because I don't give a tinker's damn about all the buzz surrounding the future of electronic books. Regardless of NY's investments and ultimate pronouncements, I don't want books that are printed on-site (doesn't that concept show a huge amount of confidence by the publisher in their authors!), down-loaded from a server, or can only be perused when powered by a battery or plugged into an outlet. Don't give me all the stuff about dead trees: I want the tactile feel of paper, the smell of ink, the sound of rustling pages. So sue me.

Of course, lately the publishing industry as a whole rarely seems to be as interested in books as they are in the perceptions of books. The race to embrace electronic product certainly stems from envy of the hi-tech zillionaire boys' club rather than market savvy or perceived need: e-stuff is sexy and creates a media buzz. All of which is preferable to thinking about, oh, worrisome things like HarperCollins' purchase of Morrow/Avon. Or the downsizing and reorganization of Random House. Or the purchase by the British bookstore chain W.H. Smith of the U.K.'s Hodder Headline, the third largest publishing company in England. Or DK's disastrous overly-optimistic gamble on their Star Wars: The Phantom Menace tie-in books, which resulted in over $40 million in losses and culminated in the sale of the company. Or the bankruptcy and liquidation of the General Publishing Group. Yeah, come to think of it, it's lots more fun to think about the latest gimmick. At least until that sexy gimmick comes back to bite you on the financial ass.

Thankfully there were tons of memorable, traditionally produced compilations and covers published throughout 1999 that didn't require electricity, a monitor, or a gig of ram to view.

The worldwide success of R.K. Rowling's three Harry Potter novels made Mary GranPré the jacket artist of the hour. Her charming interpretations for the books and the covers of Time and Nickelodeon established a look that will be hard to match for the army of licensors ready to unleash a mountain of product in 2000. The really nice thing about Harry Potter fever and the associated art is that it reinforces what we've always known: there's an appreciative audience for illustration. And some of the best narrative artists are working in the f&sf fields. Examples? How about Donato Giancola's cover for Dragon Shadow by Barbara Hambly (Del Rey), or Michael Deas' for Hell House by Richard Matheson (Tor), or Manuel Sanjulian's for Imperium Without End by Lisa Mason (Bantam), or George Pratt's for Walk In Hell by Harry Turtledove (Del Rey)? Want more proof? Look no further than the paintings by John Berkey (The Rift by Walter Jon Williams/Harper Prizm), John Jude Palencar (The Wild Swans by Peg Kerr/Warner-Aspect), Alan Lee (Prospero's Children by Jan Siegel/Voyager), Yvonne Gilbert (The Winter Queen by Devin Cary/Ace), and Thomas Canty (Silver Birch, Blood Moon edited by Ellen Datlow and Terri Windling/Avon). Other covers of merit were created by Bruce Jensen, Harry O. Morris, Doug Beekman, Jody Lee, Rick Berry, Geoff Taylor, Bob Eggleton, Michael Whelan, Kamil Vojnar, Rowena Morrill, and Gary Ruddell, among a host of others.

Some of the illustrated volumes of note included James Gurney's long-awaited sequel, Dinotopia: First Flight (Harper Collins), Women Warriors by Marianna Mayer (Morrow) with paintings by Julek Heller, and We Goddesses by Doris Orgel (DK) with art by Marilee Heyer. The Dillons provided typically wonderful illustrations for Wind Child by Shirley Murphy (HarperCollins) and Kinuko Y. Craft's enchanting paintings enhanced daughter Charlotte Craft's retelling of King

Midas and the Golden Touch (Morrow). Also creating worthwhile work were Jon J Muth (Come On, Rain by Karen Hesse), Paul O. Zelinsky (Five Children and It by E. Nesbit), and Barry Moser (The Holy Bible, available in editions priced at a whopping $10K and $30K—Holy Moses!).

The year saw a welcome host of single artist collections, including Transluminial by Hugo-winner Jim Burns and A Cosmic Cornucopia by Josh Kirby (Paper Tiger), Legacy by Grand Master Frank Collectors eat your hearts out! Paper Tiger chronicled Jane and Howard Frank's enviable collection.

Frazetta (Underwood Books), Dreams by Boris Vallejo and Soft As Steel by the underrated Julie Bell (both from Thunder's Mouth Press), and another Dreams by the always intriguing Luis Royo (NMB). Royo had a second book published by Heavy Metal entitled Prohibited. Fantagraphics released the delightfully perplexing Barry Windsor-Smith: Opus, the first in a projected series of Smith art books, Manuel Anad edited Toth: Black & White, a celebration of one of best damn designers in the history of the comics, period, and Wizard magazine branched out to publish the respectable Alex Ross Millennium. Heavy Metal produced a real gem with Overload: The Art of Juan Giménez, Vanguard produced The Neal Adams Sketchbook, Abrams' Maxfield Parrish: 1870-1966 examined one of our most popular artists, Pomegranate offered Charles Bragg: The Works by Alan Bisbort, and Terry Gilliam was showcased in Dark Knights and Holy Fools by Bob McCabe (St. Martin's Press). Illustration Books spotlighted Izubuchi Yutaka in Record of the LoDoss War Illustrations: Anam and 3-D master Yasushi Nirasawa in Niragram.

Anthology art compilations in '99 were plentiful as always. Personal favorites included The Art of the National Geographic edited by Alice Carter (National Geographic), featuring paintings from Wyeth to Lovell to Gurney; The Frank Collection by Jane and Howard Frank (Paper Tiger), an eclectic mix of the wonderful with the not, but a memorable tour nonetheless; Fantasy Art Masters by Dick Jude (Watson Guptill), which included great selections by and profiles of Alan Lee, Brom, John Howe, and Rick Berry, among others; The Art of Vampire: The Masquerade (White Wolf), a Goth-lover's fantasy come true with effective work by Tim Bradstreet, John Bolton, and Bill Sienkiewicz; and Devilman Illustrations (Illustration Books), consisting of interpretations of Go Nagai's anime creation by such talents as Tadanori Yakoo and Yoshitaka Amano. SQP was probably the most active art monograph publisher with their growing line of fantasy pin-up collections: their latest additions were Eternal Temptation and Crimson Embrace Vol. 5. Both included drawings by Joe Chiodo, Rich Larson and Steve Fastner, Mike Hoffman, and Esteban Maroto. A final trio of favorites that sort of fit in the anthology classification were The Tarzan Chronicles by Howard Green (Hyperion), a look at the creation of Disney's animated adaptation of Burroughs' Ape Man, with tons of wonderful conceptual art; Science Fiction of the 20th Century (Collector's Press), Frank Robinson's colorful follow-up to last year's Pulp Culture; and finally, Superman Masterpiece Edition (Chronicle) by Les Daniels was a fun salute to the comics icon, and even included a really nifty statue by Joe DeVito.

With all the superstores and all the web booksellers you might think it would be easy to track down virtually all of the illustrated books on your list: it just ain't so. That's why I continue to suggest Bud Plant Comic Art as the single best resource for people interested in all types of art-related products: I've yet to find anyone else that matches their inventory, variety, and customer service. Catalogs are available for $3 from Bud Plant Comic Art, P.O. Box 1689, Grass Valley, CA 95945/800-242-6642/www.budplant.com.

C O M I C S

I suppose the argument could be made that the comics are the Rodney Dangerfield of the entertainment industry: they don't get no respect. They're routinely dismissed as "kid stuff" at the same time children's books are lauded: when they've tackled adult subject matter they're attacked in turn by zealous parent groups and prosecutors. Hollywood routinely mines the field to make mediocre films which flop at the box office (Mystery Men is a recent example) and each failure seems to take the luster off of previous rare successes. At the same time many of the best creators were (and are) lured away to more profitable venues (like, hunh, film and TV) and were only heard or seen occasionally, if at all. Sales were easily half what they were seven years ago, prices appeared to be on a steadily upward spiral, and seemingly the most profitable item in your favorite funnybook store (brick & mortar or virtual) were superhero action figures. Toys for aging fanboys.

God, I love comics.

And what's not to love? There's high drama and bitter feuds and camaraderie and pretension and gut-wrenching battles—and that's just among the artists, fans, and publishers. How anything ever makes it into the shops (which are mostly run by Drew Friedman characters) is anyone's guess. And sure, Sturgeon's law certainly applies to the books that are released: 90% are crap. But if you recall the rest of the caveat you know that 90% of everything is crap. It's the hunt for that elusive 10% that makes comics fun: it's being able to find that 10% that is the ray of hope for an unappreciated wholly American art form.

DC Comics was once again the most diverse and interesting of the Big Boy publishers. Adult titles, children's comics, franchise characters, experimental concepts, and untraditional artists: they had it all throughout the year. Where else could readers find creators as diverse as Phil Hale and Sue Coe (covers for Flinch), Travis Charest (covers for the Wildstorm imprint's Wildcats) and Mike Kaluta (covers for The Books of Magic); as Alex Ross (Batman: War On Crime, written by Paul Dini) and Dan Bereton (who wrote and painted the Giantkiller mini-series)? Nowhere, I betcha. John Van Fleet turned in a bravura performance with Batman: The Chalice (written by Chuck Dixon), Dave McKean's new covers for The Dreaming reprints stopped browsers in their tracks. Ted McKeever produced the edgy and excellent Faith (which he also wrote) and Batman: Nosferatu (scripted by Randy and Jean-Marc Lofficier), and Adam Hughes' covers for Wonder Woman were eye-poppers that made me shell-out for a comic I normally don't buy. Other notable DC work was created by Scott Hampton (Lucifer), Tony Harris (Starman), John K. Syder II (Dr. Mid-Nite), Essad Ribic (Four Horsemen), Glen Fabry (Preacher), Charles Vess and Hermann Mejia (both for The Books of Fairie), and Tim Sale (Batman: Dark Victory). Of course the biggest buzz about DC, both within the industry and in the mainstream press, surrounded the heirs of Jerry Siegel (co-creator with Joe Shuster of Superman) move to reclaim half of the copyright to The Man of Steel. The debates over whether it could or should happen and what the financial implications might be kept magazines and Internet sites busy, but DC maintained a professional attitude and conducted their private business... privately. Unusual in an industry notorious for public displays and pronouncements. But the likelihood of Superman disappearing from the shelves or moving to another company?

Fans of Mignola's Hellboy could visit the official website for the latest news: www.hellboy.com

Don't bet the house on it.

Anyone who has read my previous reviews will have tumbled to the fact that I think Mike Mignola's Hellboy is pretty hot stuff: impeccably designed and drawn, wonderfully (and often hilariously) written, Mignola's work is what comics are all about. His latest from Dark Horse, Hellboy: Box Full of Evil, was further proof. Even his two-page throw-away Hellboy Jr. joke, "Pancakes", in DHP Jr. was a royal hoot. Also from Dark Horse and certainly as irresistible was Gary Gianni's The Monster Men, which exhibited some of the most exciting brush and ink work wrapped around an original storyline one could hope for. Other works of merit included The Ghost Handbook #1 (featuring Adam Hughes, Arthur Adams, and Chris Warren), Shadow Lady by Masakazu Katsura, various covers by Mark Schultz (including Subhuman and Tarzan the Untamed), and, if you want to stretch the definition a hair of "fantasy", Frank Miller's Sin City series. (C'mon, any story whose characters take the lickin's and keep on tickin' as Miller's do has to be a fantasy...)

Image published some intriguing work by David Mack (Kabuki), Liam McCormack-Sharp (Spawn: The Dark Ages), Ashley Wood (the gorgeously macabre Spawn: Blood & Salvation to name only one title), Andy Park and Jon Sibal (Tomb Raider), Hajime Sorayama (covers for the cyberpunk Tsunami Girl), and Kent Williams (just a stunning series of covers for The Crow).

The Sirius Entertainment line was strongly anchored by Joseph Michael Linsner's beautifully rendered Dawn series and produced some great work by Jill Thompson (Scary Godmother), Mark Smylie (the epic Artesia), and Jason Alexander (Empty Zone). New company Penny Farthing Press made a splash with their character The Victorian, moodily interpreted by Jim Steranko, Bernie Wrightson, Michael Kaluta, and Doug Beekman while Fantagraphics released Barry Windsor-Smith's Adastra In Africa, Weasel by Dave Cooper, Chris Ware's Acme Novelty Library #13, and the first volumes in their Charles Burns Library. NBM published the latest in Vincent Segrelles Mercenary series, Giants, as well as Miran Kim's The Fallen, Slave Labor unleashed Gloom Cookie by Ted Naifeh (written by Sernena Valentino) and Lenore by Roman Dirge (hmmmm), and Andrews McMeel offered Patrick McDonnell's charming Herriman-esque Mutts: Sundays.

Frank Frazetta Fantasy Illustrated folded its tent after a year's run (with some nice work by Daren Bader and Alex Horley) while Forbidden Zone apparently went belly-up after a raucous first issue, which featured stories by Richard Corben and Arthur Suydam. Heavy Metal seemed to be the only magazine-sized comic able to hold its own in the marketplace and was one of the few sources (along with NBM) for translations of European graphic novels.

The Internet comics news sites pretty much scooped the field's traditional magazines for breaking developments, but if readers wanted something more than headlines and sound bites they still needed to look to the newstands. The closest thing the industry has to a trade publication is The Comics Journal; the caveat "closest thing" because TCJ has always worn their biases as badges of honor and only occasionally allow objectivity to override the prejudices of their writers and editors—there's almost always the perception, rightly or wrongly, that the slant of negative stories are the result of personal vendettas. That said, The Journal is still the most evenhanded (scary thought) of the various print magazines, unafraid to ruffle feathers or alienate publishers and artists, and produces well-researched articles and thorough interviews. (The Comics Journal, 7563 Lake City Way NE, Seattle WA 98115.) Fans with more of a nostalgic-bent were well-served by Jon B. Cooke's Comic Book Artist (TwoMorrows, 1812 Park Dr., Raleigh, NC 27605) and Diamond's Comic Book Marketplace (Gemstone Publishing, Inc., P.O. Box 180700, Coronado, CA 92178).

D I M E N S I O N A L

I remember that as a kid reading Eerie and Creepy and reprints of the old EC comics one of the things I always thought was neat was that artists like Frank Frazetta and Al Williamson and Wallace Wood included drawings of fanciful statues in panels otherwise consisting of talking heads: warriors battling monsters, stunning female figures, and animated wildlife scenes spiced up otherwise visually bland situations. Obviously some other readers were equally impressed, so much so that they grew up to create dimensional work that captured the same sensibility.

If anything, 1999 was almost too much of a good thing as a legion of sculptors unleashed a horde of statues, toys, and model kits on a relatively modest market. Let's face it, there aren't as many consumers and retail outlets for genre characters as there are for, oh, Precious Moments figures.

Randy Bowen's company produced a number of excellent pieces, including Astro City's "The Samaritan" (sculpted by Randy and designed by Brent Anderson and Alex Ross), a bust of H.P. Lovecraft created by Stephen Hickman, "The Rocketeer" (designed by Dave Stevens/sculpted by Ken Melton), and "Grendel Prime" (created in collaboration with the talented Shiflett Bros.). Bowen also released a popular line of Marvel superhero mini-busts and his own action figure, "Bionica", a take-off on the False Maria from Metropolis.

Moore Creations created the impressive "The Barbarian" (sculpted by Clayburn Moore), the second of their Frazetta-based statues, as well as Susumu

Amazing Figure Modeler is easily the best resource for what's happening in the field of genre model kits and statues

Sugita's seductive take on comic's bad girl, "Vampirella". Moore Creations was also responsible for some very impressive and expressive additions to the action figure market, notably some dead-on likenesses of the cast of Buffy the Vampire Slayer.

DC Comics offered a number of first class pieces including "Darkseid", "Manhunter" (from a design by Walter Simonson), and a "Batman Snowglobe", all sculpted by William Paquet. Other tasty icons were "Kingdom Come: Shazam!" by Alex Ross and "Crisis on Infinite Earths" by Tim Bruckner.

Fewture Models was responsible for both Takayuki Takeya's excellent "Warrior Alien" and "Alien Pile", Shigeru Yamazaki's stunning "10th Anniversary Dawn" figure (designed by Joseph Michael Linsner) and whimsical "Chi-Chian" statue (designed by Voltaire), and Yasushi Nirasawa's "Devilman", "Guillotina", and "Dokuro Nina" action figures. The Greenwich Workshop (thought to be at least partially, if not entirely, owned by conglomerate Hallmark Cards) produced fanciful bisques based on the art of James Christensen (including "Queen Mab"), Will Bullas, and Scott Gustafson; Tony McVey reinterpreted Forbidden Planet's "Id Monster" for Menagerie Productions; Dark Horse unveiled Kent Melton's version of "The Big Guy & Rusty the Boy Robot" (designed by Geof Darrow) as well as Jean-Louis Crinon's humorous interpretations of Basil Wolverton's "Weirdos"; Sam Greenwell and Dan Horne collaborated on Tolkien's "Lord of the Nazgûl" for Toy Vault; solo, Horne created "Gron Elflayer" for Flying Carpet Studio; X-O Facto offered "Deborah Dutch as the Warrior Goddess", sculpted by the Joy & Tom Studio; and Japan's Alpha released Yoshimasa Nakao's "Motoko Kusanagi", the principle character from the classic anime Ghost In the Shell.

Ok, and though I made the flip comment earlier about "toys for fanboys" (which really is as truthful as it is sarcastic), McFarlane Toys does some of the coolest figures (or "conversation starters") on the market. As I type these words Frank Miller's "Marv" menaces me from atop my computer monitor, Geof Darrow's severed head dangling from one hand; Joseph Linsner's "Dawn" stares over my shoulder. Their Sleepy Hollow figures will join them shortly and "The Crow" already guards Cathy's Mac. Dammit. McFarlane makes it pretty difficult for me to make smartass comments and not look like a hypocrite. But, wait: these are conversation starters, not toys, so I'm safe. Right.

EDITORIAL

Years ago I attended a conference that featured David Carson as a speaker. At the time Carson was art director for the short-lived Beach Culture, a hip flavor-of-the-month magazine both popular and notorious for its alternative typographic and design solutions. Trademarks were tiny run-on text and headlines that rivaled Rick Griffin for illegibility. David announced that he was more concerned with the "look" than with comprehension, explaining that when he was forced to break-up an article and continue it in another part of the magazine he would place the continuation wherever he wanted without providing the reader with directions to turn to another page: "I figured if you were 'with it', you'd find the rest sooner or later," he said. Designers tend to love Carson's style; readers tend not to.

So, if David Carson (or to a slightly lesser degree, Britain's Neville Brody) represent the "edge" of contemporary magazine design, many of the genre publications are examples of viewpoints stuck in the '50s. Though their conservative layouts, traditional artistic solutions, and middle-of-the-road editorial directions don't show contempt for their readers, neither do they challenge or excite them. And that's precisely what a magazine should do, without losing sight of the needs of their audience—and has to do if it hopes to maintain their customer base, attract advertisers, and ultimately survive.

That's one of the reasons I'm rooting for Wizards of the Coasts' Amazing Stories. Art Director Shauna Wolf Narciso has been pushing the genre envelope with tip top design and exceptional art by the likes of John Jude Palencar, Anita Kunz, Cliff Nielson, and Greg Spalenka. Granted, the covers tended to be a little weak and played to the prejudices and expectations of the traditional sf audience (and/or media fans): marketing is, afterall, marketing. But I trust the outside will be as impressive as the inside in the near future. On a similar note, I had high hopes for Woodhaus Studios' Submedia: featuring strong, contemporary design, its first (and to my knowledge, only) issue included great art, interviews, and articles by and about Ashley Wood, Barry Windsor-Smith, and Bill Sienkiewicz. I hope it reemerges, but the odds don't look good. Suffering a similar fate was Coppervale's International Studio. Its single issue featured Bryn Barnard, Paul Chadwick, and Andrew Loomis. Publisher James Owen promises a relaunch; I'll keep my fingers crossed. Still perking along (if a little irregularly) was Vanguard's Tales From the Edge—their 15th issue was devoted to Sienkiewicz and was an instant sell-out.

Realms of Fantasy, though using almost exclusively reprint covers, included some original interiors by John Hanley, Broeck Steadman, John Berkey, and Steven Adler. Jim Burns, Nicholas Jainschigg, and Jon Foster provided the covers for Asimov's SF Magazine. Analog sported work by George Krauter and Ron Miller, and the Magazine of Fantasy & Science Fiction boasted covers by Bob Eggleton, Barclay Shaw, and Jill Bauman. Still the best way to track the changes in our ever-evolving genre is to read Locus, Isis's trade journal. Sample copies are available from Locus, P.O. Box 13305, Oakland, CA 94601. $5 sample.

Of course, exemplary futuristic art appeared in magazines outside of the traditional venues. I stumbled across some wonderful pieces by Charles Burns in Some increasingly... produced in Japan... anime-inspired "Motoko Kusanagi".

Esquire, Roberto Parada in Entertainment Weekly, C.F. Payne in Rolling Stone, and David Seeley in The Village Voice. Robert Williams' Juxtapoz provided a forum for contemporary "outsider" art, i.e. gallery work that flirts with underground comics, pop symbols, horror, and biker philosophy. Meanwhile, Aussie Damien Michael's Art Visionary focused on the equally jarring European-inspired school of fantastic surrealism: both publications showcased challenging painters worthy of further exposure. But you know, at the end of the day I'm always rewarded by the diversity of the work published in Playboy, art directed by Tom Staebler. Featuring simply tremendous illustrations by Kent Williams, Guy Billout, and Dave McKean to name only a few, Playboy remains the last exciting link to the golden age of magazine illustration. Time to renew my subscription!

INSTITUTIONAL

Standing before a daunting expanse of entries to be judged, Juror Toby Schwartz asked me, "What exactly is the 'Institutional' category?" My response was a shrug, a wave, and a brief, "Everything else."

Packaging, greeting cards, posters, promotions, pro-bono assignments: anything that doesn't easily fit within the other categories winds up in Institutional. As such, it's virtually impossible to track any trends or artists with any real accuracy. Just as an example, the print market ain't what it used to be and...the print market is better than ever. Hunting for works in the galleries (or frame shops) by anyone other than Dali or Michael Parkes might prove frustrating. But dropping by ASFA's Print Shop at various conventions or checking out individual artists' websites would reveal that the choices, sizes, and prices for frameable reproductions has become almost endless. Similarly, specialty shops have never done great business with posters and portfolios of comics character despite modest prices and the focus of their clientele, but visiting the Internet auction sites would reveal the same dead inventory selling rather briskly. Or, better, walk into a Warner Studios store at you favorite mall and you'd see limited edition Batman or Justice League prints at $400 and up being sold as soon as they were offered. Obviously there's an eager audience "out there": finding them efficiently seems to be the challenge.

once-hot venue killed by over-saturation, ridiculous pricing, and speculation. However, the role-playing game industry still seems to be the largest visible market for fantastic artists—and is as difficult to keep track of as advertising and the film industries. Who drew all those damn Pokémon critters? You've got me. I know if you search you can find some great game images by Brom and R.K. Post and Ron Spears and Tim Bradstreet and Mark Zug and probably anyone else you can imagine, but where to start the search? Again, you've got me. The one bit of news (beyond the phenomenal success of the aforementioned Pokémon and the sure-to-be-equally-hot 2000 release of the Harry Potter game) that sent a ripple through the market was Hasbro Toys purchase of Wizards of the Coast for $325 million (which in-turn had previously bought out TSR). Still operating independently, the general consensus seems to be that the consolidation of companies will strengthen the industry and help avoid repetition in products and sales declines. Time will tell.

IN PASSING

In 1999 we said farewell to these members of the creative community: David Allen (b. 1945), artist and popular stop-motion movie animator. Joel Beck (b. 1943), under-ground comix artist. Edwin Biukovic (b. 1969), comics artist. Lee Falk (b. 1912), creator and writer of

The Phantom and Mandrake the Magician newspaper strips. Eddie Jones (b. 1935), British sf artist. Ludek Pesek (b. 1919), astronomical artist. John Prentice (b. 1920), artist for the Rip Kirby newspaper strip. Shel Silverstein (b. 1932), artist and writer, best known for Where The Sidewalk Ends. Eric Stanton (b. 1927), cartoonist and fetish artist. Saul Steinberg (b. 1914), cartoonist primarily remembered for his work for The New Yorker. Vincent Sullivan (b. 1911), cartoonist, editor, and publisher of ME Comics.

Star Wars: The Phantom Menace dominated the media in the first half of 1999, making the covers of both Newsweek (by Drew Struzan) and Mad (by Mark Stutzman).

Anyway, some of the art I noticed this past year (in no particular order) included prints by Glenn Barr ("Bad Betty/Poor Barney"), Mark Ryden ("Pele"), Coop ("Major Hard-On"), and Alex Ross ("The Joker & Harley Quinn"); portfolios by Bill Stout ("World of Oz"/Art Works Fine Arts), Doug Chiang ("Star Wars: Episode 1"/Chronicle), and Travis Charest ("New Horizon"/Wildstorm Productions); and a nice selection of calendars by Joseph Michael Linsner (Dawn/Sirius), Ted Nasmith (Lord of the Rings/HarperCollins), Gil Bruvel, Boris Vallejo (Workman), Julie Bell (Golden Turtle), and Daniel Merriam (Ronnie Sellers), to name only a handful.

Artist trading cards have rapidly become the Edsels of the field; another

Arnie Fenner is the art director for Andrews & McMeel Publishing, a division of Andrews McMeel Universal. He is the recipient of 2 World Fantasy Awards as well as honors from The Society of Illustrators, CA, Arts & Letters, and many art directors clubs. Cathy Fenner has been a noted graphic designer for Hallmark Cards for over 20 years and, with Arnie, was honored with the Locus awards in 1995, 1996, 1997, and 1999. She was the co-editor of Age of Innocence by Jeffrey Jones, Something In My Eye by Michael Whelan and a pair of retrospectives by Frank Frazetta, Icon and Legacy. They live in Kansas with their son, Bob, and perpetually shedding white cat, Buddy.

This seventh annual collection of the best in contemporary fantasy, science fiction, and horror art is a treasure trove of imaginative work by many of the world's most renowned creators. Chosen by a respected jury of artists, designers, and art directors, Spectrum 7 features over 300 full color paintings, drawings, and sculptures by an electrifying range of artists including Dave McKean, Anita Kunz, Jon J Muth, Michael Whelan, John Jude Palencar, Donato Giancola, Rick Berry, Syd Mead, and more than 200 more superb talents. Also included is an insightful, sometimes controversial look back at the previous year's highlights and events as well as Spectrum's recognition of British watercolorist Alan Lee with the sixth Grand Master Award.

In a word, indispensable.*
